Grandfather was opposed to war and compulsory military training so he wanted to come to America but Grandmother objected. When the oldest son became of military age, Grandmother wrote to her brother, Carl Kaiser, who had come to America four years earlier, to inquire regarding opportunities here. He replied that opportunities were better so she consented to come.

The family left Germany for America in the fall of 1854. The ship they came on was of the four-mast type, named "Herman," carrying 400 persons and captained by a man named "Kuhlman." The "Herman" and a two-mast ship, which left Brahm a day earlier, met in mid-ocean and the captains talked with each other through megaphones about eating conditions, etc. Finally these ships came so close together that the passengers could talk with each other. Then the ships took their separate courses – the "Herman" by way of New Orleans and the two-mast ship by way of New York.

The ship "Herman" encountered a severe storm, causing it to drift helplessly into a hot air current, far off its course. The captain of the ship became intoxicated and let the ship drift into southern waters. The heat and dampness caused mold to collect on the ship, and in trying to kill this mold, the tar on the deck caught fire. Grandfather called his group together to see what they could do to help extinguish the blaze. They decided that rather than be burned alive they would jump overboard. He took them to a room on deck to be ready when the time came to abandon the ship. People began to get panicky. One man thought of beating the fire out, so they got a lot of clothing together, put it on the fire and started stamping on it. They finally succeeded in smothering the flames and saved the ship.

It was then that cholera broke out on the ship taking thirty-seven lives including grandmother, the oldest daughter, Henriette, and the youngest son, Henry, aged three. Henriette ate breakfast with the family and by night she was dead, so fast the sickness advanced .The first on the ship to die were buried two to a coffin. The coffins were made of the boards which divided the ship's sleeping compartments. Finally the board supply was exhausted so the remaining dead were sewed in bed sheets. The dead were taken to a room at the top of the ship and left there until nightfall, when they were lowered into the sea. There were no doctors on the ship, but some of the families had brought medicine with them. However, it was of no use because the sickness was too far advanced .

Two other families from a neighboring village happened to have quarters one on each side of the Tigges' stateroom. The head of one of these families was a blacksmith who had three sons, the youngest one aged three or four and the other two just a little older. All three of the boys died leaving the parents alone, who after a brief stay in Illinois, returned to Germany. The other family had two grown boys, two grown girls and smaller boys. Of this family the father and the two grown boys died.

Finally the second officer in command locked up the captain and took command of the ship himself. When the ship got back where it was cooler, the sickness was checked.

No sickness occurred on the two-mast ship and it was thought that had the Tigges family come to New York on that ship perhaps the whole family might have arrived safely in America. The two-mast ship arrived at its destination sooner than did the "Herman" because the route was shorter.

After nine weeks and one day on the ocean, the "Herman" landed at New Orleans. It sailed up the Mississippi River to St. Louis requiring an additional nine days. From St. Louis it was a three-hour ride on the water to Cairo, Illinois. From there the group traveled by rail to Freeport, Illinois.

Carl Kaiser, brother of Grandmother Tigges, and his son-in-law, by the name of Reeh, who married Kaiser's only daughter, had come to America four years before and located at Freeport. The Kaiser and Reeh families lived together. They met Grandfather Tigges and the surviving members of his family at Freeport and took them to their home. The children who landed safely in America with their father were:

I Friederike
II Wilhelmine
III Friedrich
IV Sophie
V Philipp
VI Ernst
VII Wilhelm
VIII August

Carl Kaiser had come by way of New Orleans when he came to America so he advised Grandfather to do so. In that way they would be farther inland than if they came to New York, thus saving the expense of train fare for such a long distance.

After a short visit at the Kaiser and Reeh homes, Grandfather bought sixty acres of land in Illinois but the family lived there but one or one and one-half years. Grandfather was told by the native settlers, who resented the invasion of newcomers, that if he would break the sod the wind would blow the grain out of the ground. So they sold the farm and traveled by oxen to Wisconsin, near LaCrosse, in Green County. This was slow going. They often made the comment, "If we don't get there today, we will tomorrow."

The daughters, having married, remained in Illinois.

The family of father and sons each took timber claims and cut the trees and built a log house with nothing but a ground floor in it.

After grubbing the timber off the land, they continued to farm together until Philipp was injured in a threshing accident and contracted pneumonia and died November 13, 1861. He was buried in North Ridge cemetery near Coon Valley, Wisconsin.

The group remained together until the oldest son, Friedrich, was married. Then Grandfather and the other sons bought land in Iowa and moved to Marshall County in 1868. To these settlers Iowa was indeed the garden spot of the world after having lived in the rugged section of Wisconsin. Friedrich remained in Wisconsin until the farm was sold there, then he joined the rest of the family in 1870. They lived together.

The son, William, married in 1872.

Grandfather and sons, Ernst and August, continued to live together. Grandfather kept house for the two sons until he was struck by lightning and instantly killed May 30, 1874. He was buried in the Horn Cemetery, now known as St. John's Cemetery in Jasper County, Iowa.

The home was then broken up and the sons married and set up homes of their own.

All were now married and living in different parts of the country. At the present time all the original family are deceased.

The family is divided into eight units,the descendants of each of Fredrich and Amalia Tigges' children who arrived safely in America forming one unit. Friederike's family forms the first unit, Wilhelmine's the second unit, etc.
